RESEARCH + ENTERPRISE

The Glasgow School of Art generates new knowledge through creative practice and scholarship in art, design and architecture.

In the 2001 Research Assessment Exercise (RAE2001), the high quality of the GSA's research was recognised by a rating of 4 (out of 5*). Research at the GSA is of national and in some cases international importance, involving artists, designers, architects, historians and critics of world standing and we were the largest art and design research community in the UK achieve this rating.

At the GSA we value research for the cultural, economic, social and educational benefits and impact that it can bring to our students, the communities we work with and wider society. It is therefore unsurprising that the School has played, and continues to play, a central role in the regeneration and development of Glasgow as Scotland's cultural and creative capital.

Glasgow, the 1990 European City of Culture and the 1999 UK City of Architecture and Design is now home to the largest contemporary arts community outside
